The partnership between the Washington-based Collaborative and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Division of Adolescent and School Health has been funded through an $18 million grant the United States Department of Education awarded the Collaborative on June 25 to provide the districts with the e-Portfolio. With the e-Portfolio, districts will have access to a complete and easy-to-use web-based educational planning and assessment solution, helping them manage student, teacher, and school-level education activities, the Collaborative said. The award-winning e-Portfolio will be available to every district in the country this fall. "Developing an e-Portfolio for schools is an important first step," said Jackie Beck, senior vice president of education and research at the Collaborative. "It provides students with the information needed to meet professional educational standards and prepares them for continued learning throughout their career. In addition, it is an effective tool for teachers to use to guide student learning." School districts will use the toolkit to address the unique needs of each student, which will determine how schools can work with districts to provide the best possible educational opportunities for each student. By developing a plan that is tailored to the needs of each individual child, schools and districts will be better able to meet those children's needs, Beck said. "Districts must be focused on student-centered, evidence-based education if they are to succeed in helping students reach their fullest potential," the Collaborative said. "Schools, using the e-Portfolio, can increase transparency across the school district and better track student learning."Paying a call on GSPs in need: the medical emergency team at Kenner General Hospital.
